• The program's 14 wins away from home is tied for eighth most in NCAA Division I and the percentage of games played away from home ranks tied for 13th highest.

• Iona's .636 winning percentage in games away from home is second best in the country (Florida, .682) among the 41 teams that have played more than 60% of their contests away from home.

• The Gaels' six wins on a neutral court are more than every Division I team except Duke (8), Gonzaga (8) and Florida (7).

EFFICIENT, EFFECTIVE, AND FAST PACED

• Iona ranks No. 69 in the nation on Ken Pomeroy's Adjusted Offensive Efficiency (110.3).

• Offensive Efficiency is measured by calculating the amount of points a team would score in 100 possessions. Ken Pomeroy's formula adjusts for the quality of opposing defenses, the site of each game, and when each game was played.

- Iona ranks No. 57 (53.4%) in Effective FG%.
- EFG% adjusts for the fact that a three-point field goal is worth one more point than a two-point field goal.
- The Gaels are also the 57th "fastest pace" team in the country, averaging 70.4 possessions per game.

GREAT ALASKA SHOOT OUT CHAMPS

Iona made its fifth trip to the 49th state and its fourth appearance in the Great Alaska Shootout.

The Gaels won three contests in Anchorage, topping the Missouri Valley's Drake, Big Sky favorite Weber State and Mountain West contender Nevada. They became the first MAAC program to capture the championship in the nation's oldest regular-season college basketball tournament, which completed its 39th edition.

Graduate Sam Cassell Jr. joined Iona Hall of Famers Jeff Ruland (1979) and Steve Burtt Sr. (1981) as Iona performers to take home MVP honors.

With the win in the title game, Iona improved to 7-5 all-time at the tournament, joining Purdue, North Carolina, North Carolina State, Kentucky, Marquette, Louisville, Duke, Kansas, Syracuse, UAB and Washington as the only visiting programs with seven or more Shootout wins.

The Gaels also participated in the 1979, 1981 and 1988 Great Alaska Shootouts.

In 1979, No. 19 Iona defeated Texas A&M and Long Beach State before falling to No. 4 Kentucky in the championship game with Ruland, Kevin Hamilton and Glenn Vickers named the All-Tournament team.

The 1981 event saw the Gaels take third place with wins over Ohio State and Washington State.

Burtt Sr. and Gary Springer were All-Tournament.

Iona finished eighth in 1998.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

2016-17 PRESS CLIPPINGS

(UPDATED MARCH 13, 2017)

12/15/11 - ESPNNewYork.com - Ian O'Connor

TIM CLUESS IS HIS BROTHERS' KEEPER

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. -- At a time in college basketball when coaches pad their records at the expense of the meek, Tim Cluess keeps hearing it about his schedule, his journey through a maze of mid-major madness.

Purdue and Maryland in Puerto Rico. A date at altitude in Denver. A no-win Sunday matinee at Marshall. Twelve of the first 14 games away from his Iona campus, playing teams nobody wants to play in gyms nobody wants to visit, the kind of coach-class odyssey that can get a coach fired.

The schedule is insanely tough, just not as tough as the man who confronts it. At 52, Cluess is a scarred survivor out of one of the great sports families of New York, the West Hempstead family of Henry and Patricia Cluess that delivered four sons to St. John's on basketball scholarships, four who would play professionally, and one daughter athletic enough to read a how-to book on racquetball before winning national and world titles in the sport within a few years.

The Cluesses were the Kennedys of Long Island basketball, and yet the youngest child, Tim, doesn't carry himself as any son of Irish-Catholic royalty at Iona, maybe the one school in the area with a team strong enough to win an NCAA Tournament game or two in March.

His parents wouldn't tolerate even a hint of arrogance from one of their own, and Tim is driven every day to honor their working-class legacy and to coach in the name of the two brothers who died long before their time.

Greg was 26 when he succumbed to lymphoma in 1976, four years after the New York Knicks picked the 6-foot-9 forward in the sixth round and five years after the New York Nets took him in the American Basketball Association draft. Greg tried out for the Nets instead of the Knicks, and just his luck, the Nets brought in a budding doctor by the name of Julius Winfield Erving II.

Kevin was 33 when he succumbed to leukemia in 1986, 11 years after the Kansas City Kings drafted the 6-foot-5 St. John's star in the fourth round, cut him, and ignored the scouting report delivered by their own Tiny Archibald, who called Kevin the best guard not in the NBA.

For every game at Iona, Tim wears Greg's old NIT watch, one that hasn't kept time in years. He wears a pin of an angel and a basketball in memory of Greg and Kevin, and half of a Mizpah charm that reads, "May the Lord watch between me and thee while we are apart from one another."

The other half rests inside Kevin's suit in his casket.

Greg and Kevin have been gone for decades, and yet Tim still talks to them. Sometimes in a moment of pregame solitude he will whisper, "Kevin, we're going to need someone on our team to shoot like you tonight," or "Greg, we're going to need some of those rebounds you always used to get."

Sometimes it's a simple "I wish you were here," or "Thank you for inspiring me to do this."

Once a wildly successful high school, junior college and Division II coach, Tim is the last hope of the Cluesses of Broadway, their last shot at big-time basketball success. His Division I Gaels belong to his family, and to the two brothers who taught Tim how to shoot against wooden backboards their father nailed to a backyard garage and a tree.

"I always feel them with me and around me," Tim said, "and part of me is dedicating my life to them. I still miss their friendship every day, and there aren't a couple of hours that go by that I don't think of them.

"People say time heals all wounds, and no it doesn't. Those wounds never heal. You just learn how to manage the wounds."

And the pain. Through their trials and tragedies and triumphs, the fighting Cluesses were always the reigning kings of pain.

From West Hempstead to Queens

The Cape Cod had four bedrooms and one bathroom to accommodate nine or more Cluesses, including Patricia Horan, the Cluess matriarch and daughter of an Irish hurling champ who raised his family around the County Offaly bogs.

Patricia took in her sister Anne in West Hempstead and sometimes another family member or two. After Sunday morning Mass at St. Thomas the Apostle, the smell of bacon and the sounds of "One Day at a Time" and other Irish songs filled a home that was more like a local rec center. You never knew who you'd find at the Cluesses'. There was a lot of love, if not a lot of room.

Henry, the patriarch, was the boys' CYO coach at St. Thomas. He was a tall man who did some boxing in the Navy, and while he was always quick with a laugh, he wasn't afraid to settle a neighborhood quarrel with his fists.

Henry put in some hard night-shift hours over 45 years as a machinist and manufacturing supervisor at Sperry Rand, making just enough to put his children through Catholic schools. He was good enough with his hands to fix the second-hand cars the Cluesses forever owned.

Henry and Patricia couldn't afford a new set of wheels, never mind a college education for their five kids. But something came out of the boys' driveway games of two-on-two, something other than the occasional broken window and bloodied nose.

Hope. When the Cluesses weren't playing all night at St. Thomas, at least until the weary priests chased them off, they were honing their jump shots in the backyard, dribbling between their legs and conducting passing drills in their bedrooms, and attracting the full attention of every St. John's coach from Joe Lapchick to Lou Carnesecca to Frank Mulzoff.

Hank, the oldest, started the pipeline from West Hempstead to Queens in the mid-1960s and played for the Hall of Famers-to-be, Lapchick and Carnesecca, who fondly recalled the 6-foot-6 forward for drawing a crucial foul on Michigan's Cazzie Russell in St. John's enduring comeback victory for the Holiday Festival title.

"Hank had a nice touch and that typical Cluess body," Carnesecca said through a laugh. "Rangy."

Hank tried out for the ABA's New Jersey Americans and their successors, the New York Nets, but settled for a run with Real Madrid in Spain before returning home and becoming a ref, a cop, a director of the Police Athletic League and a traveling softball all-star.

Greg was up next at St. John's, a big man with a perimeter touch who played for Mulzoff in the early '70s while Looie was off coaching the Nets. The tallest Cluess could've reported to Knicks camp when he was done with college, but figured he'd have a tough time winning a spot on Red Holzman's bench.

Only the Nets had Rick Barry, and then Dr. J., leaving Greg as a practice player who made extra cash as a weekend member of the Eastern League's Hartford Capitals and, later, as an agent who represented prospects and journeymen looking for deals in Europe.

Right behind Greg was Kevin, the natural, the best of the brood, and Carnesecca was lucky enough to have made it back to St. John's in time to coach him. Kevin was big for a guard back then, and he could pass, dribble, defend, and shoot reliably enough to earn the nickname "Radar."

Carnesecca called him a "fanatic," someone who adored the game. "Kevin could really see the floor," Looie said. "He was way ahead of his time."

Kevin would barely miss making the roster of the Kansas City Kings, and no, this didn't register as a crisis in the Cluess home. Suddenly Greg was sick, terribly sick. He'd been diagnosed with lymphoma a couple of weeks after his daughter Kerri was born, and the radiation and chemo couldn't beat back the tumors for good.

Playing and living for Greg

Greg's wife, Linda, called him one day at Memorial Sloan-Kettering, and her husband didn't sound like himself. "Just stay home and take care of my daughter," Greg told her, but Linda knew she needed to get to him as quickly as she could.

Henry and Patricia Cluess made their own frantic drive to Sloan with their daughter, Mary Ann. On their way over the 59th Street Bridge, the Simon & Garfunkel song "Bridge Over Troubled Water" played on the car radio, and something washed over Mary Ann as she looked into the river.

"Oh my God," she told herself. "Greg is dead."

She didn't tell her parents; the doctors did when they arrived at the hospital.

Mary Ann checked her brother's chart, and Greg's time of death was the exact time she'd heard the song. "I just felt like his spirit came to me," she said.

Her younger brother, Tim, was competing in a high school basketball tournament in Utica when he heard a knock on his door early the next morning. It was the oldest of the Cluess boys, Hank, telling him Greg was gone. Tim didn't believe him. He was 16, too young to handle anything like a man.

Tim started playing harder and meaner at St. Agnes, where the longtime coach, Frank Morris, thought he'd been "too nice" on the court. "I don't know if it was maturing or if it was anger," Tim said, "but I was trying to do things in Greg's memory, trying to play for him and live for him as well as myself."

Tim followed Greg at St. Agnes, and came to wear his No. 44; Hank and Kevin each wore No. 35 and had played for the legendary Jack Curran at Archbishop Molloy. Tim was a 6-foot-6 wing recruited by the likes of Jim Valvano (Iona), Rick Pitino (Boston U.), and Bobby Cremins (Appalachian State), but being a Cluess back then meant signing with St. John's.

Only Tim wouldn't replicate his brothers' college careers. He suffered a couple of injuries, and plunged on Carnesecca's depth chart. Tim remained a fearless player in practice, one who wouldn't back down from an elbow or a potential confrontation with a bigger or better teammate any more than he'd back down from his older brothers in the driveway.

"But at the time I had a lot of pretty good players," Carnesecca said. "Tim was very smart and really knew the game. Maybe his body hadn't caught up to his brains yet."

Disillusioned and searching for a home, Tim left St. John's and made a brief stop at the College of Charleston before transferring to Hofstra, where he found some playing time and some happiness before word came that Kevin's stomach virus wasn't a stomach virus after all.

'You're going straight to heaven'

Kevin hadn't found a roster spot in the NBA -- the Boston Celtics and others had scouted him and passed -- and ended up playing professionally in the Philippines. He'd opened a bar and restaurant on Long Island, and prepared to marry Jeanne Weston, daughter of Jimmy Weston, the former St. John's player whose popular Manhattan saloon counted Frank Sinatra, George Steinbrenner and Muhammad Ali among its regulars.

Life was good until a doctor told Kevin it was not. "My brother was there by himself in a hospital room," Tim said, "and the doctor came in and told him, 'You've got leukemia. You've got three years to live, and there's nothing we can do.'"

Kevin needed a bone marrow transplant, a truth that summoned the best of the Cluess competitive spirit. Kevin's siblings were being tested as potential donors when Mary Ann shot a funny look at Tim and Hank.

She'd been a high school basketball player herself at Maria Regina (her mother was her first CYO coach, too), her stroke so pure that the St. John's women's coach offered her a scholarship on the spot after watching her in a pickup game. Mary Ann politely declined. She didn't want road trips to prevent her from seeing Greg and Kevin play.

Like Kevin, Mary Ann was something of a natural. She was an athlete hardened in her youth by the daily struggles of life with four brothers in a one-bathroom home. She played three sports in high school, and jumped into stickball games with her brothers and neighborhood friends outside the Cluess home, using sewers and street signs as bases.

Upon graduating from St. John's, Mary Ann answered an ad in the Long Island Press for a director of a racquetball facility. She applied without knowing the first thing about racquetball, read a book on the sport, and landed the job. Mary Ann started working out at the club, and two years later seized the U.S. doubles championship and the world doubles title after that.

So Mary Ann badly wanted to win at everything, even when it came to saving her brother's life. "I looked at Timmy and Hank when we were doing the blood test for a match," she said, "and I was like, 'Why are you guys even here? You know I'm going to be the one to give it to Kevin.' And then when I was told I was an exact match, I said, 'I told you guys.'"

Kevin made it through the transplant, went to work on Wall Street, and began building a new life with his bride, Jeanne. Tim was playing pro ball in Australia and loving every second of it, secure in the hope that Kevin was going to beat the odds, when the phone rang and his world came undone one more time.

Kevin was out of remission, and Tim told his Australian club he was needed at home. Mary Ann again stepped up as a bone marrow donor, of course she did, but the second transplant didn't sustain Kevin for long.

He told friends he was concerned about what his deteriorating condition was doing to his parents. "It was never about him," Tim said, "because that's how he always was."

Kevin was dying in a bed at Sloan, surrounded by Cluesses, when he woke up and asked everyone how they were doing. "And then Kevin asked us, 'What is your definition of hell?'" said Hank, devastated by the sight a second brother living through it.

"It's nothing you have to worry about," Mary Ann would tell Kevin. "You're going straight to heaven and God."

Kevin was buried in Greg's plot at St. Charles Cemetery in Farmingdale.

Basketball comes calling -- again

Done playing basketball, Tim Cluess threw himself into his work as a police officer; he'd followed Hank into the force. Tim was working at the fourth precinct of Nassau County when he got a call about someone brandishing a weapon. He raced with his partner to the apartment building, made his way up a narrow staircase, and came upon a man holding a shotgun in one hand and a 7-year-old girl in another.

The man put the girl in front of him, and yet another Cluess tragedy was seconds away from unfolding. "We pointed our guns at him and tried to talk him out of it," Tim said. "But you're sitting there saying, 'You're dead if he wants to kill you right now, and there's nothing you can do about it.'"

After five minutes that felt like 50, the man put down the shotgun and released the girl.

Tim wasn't meant to be a cop, not when the game kept tugging on him. By 1991, he'd already done some freshman and junior varsity coaching at St. Dominic's and Holy Trinity when he was offered the varsity job at St. Mary's of Manhasset, a school with a long history of lousy teams.

On the first day of tryouts at St. Mary's, Tim walked into the gym to find three rubber basketballs rolling this way and that. His starting point guard was trying to punt balls into the basket from midcourt, and another kid was playing the trumpet on the stage.

Tim turned to a friend and asked "What the hell did I just get myself into?" If only Cluess had a clue.

'We knew he was a fighter'

On that first day of that first St. Mary's season, Tim suspended his best player for being late and made him watch five days of practice through a small window before letting him back in the gym.

St. Mary's actually won 10 games that year. The next season, the Gaels reached the league championship game. Before Cluess left in 2005, St. Mary's was ranked among the heavyweights in USA Today's national poll, and had more league, county and state titles than its coach could count. Tim's last star at the school, Danny Green, would land a scholarship at North Carolina and make it to the NBA.

"You had this tall, white, Irish guy teaching all of these black kids everything from staying low in your dribble to taking your hat off while you're walking into a building," said Dwayne Byfield, an African-American player who was on academic probation after transferring into St. Mary's and who credits Cluess for molding him into an honor-roll student, a scholarship player at Monmouth, and a successful career man at Hugo Boss.

"A lot of coaches use kids," Byfield said, "but Cluess only uses you for what you can get out of yourself. That's why guys who didn't even get in the game were willing to run into a wall for him. We knew he was a fighter who came from a family of fighters, and that helped him instill discipline in us."

"Guys who didn't even get in the game were willing to run into a wall for him," one former player says of Tim Cluess.

Tim never planned on being a college coach, not after everything he'd seen on the recruiting trail. Too many promises and hearts got broken along the way, and besides, the Dwayne Byfields made coaching high school ball its own reward.

But over time, Tim ran into the predictable problems at St. Mary's.

Some opposing coaches reportedly didn't appreciate the margins of his victories, and some administrators reportedly didn't appreciate the number of foreign students on his team. Tim decided to make his 14th season his last.

"And I didn't know if I'd ever again coach another day," he said.

Tim could've gone back into the bar and restaurant business; he'd already opened and closed a place called Docksidiers, the same name as Kevin's old place. Or he could've taken the coaching job at Suffolk Community College-Brentwood.

Basketball won out. "I don't know if I'll like coaching guys this age," Tim told his wife, Karen. "I'll try it for a year."

He claimed a regional title in his one season at Suffolk, then turned C.W. Post into a national Division II power. Suddenly Iona needed a replacement for the Seton Hall-bound Kevin Willard, son of Ralph Willard, the man who had hired Tim at St. Dominic's way back when, and there was Tim talking himself into becoming an honest-to-God Division I coach.

He cried when he told his C.W. Post players. They told him that he had to take the promotion, and that they were proud of him. Gil Montalvo, a point guard left behind by Cluess at St. Mary's and at C.W. Post, was among the Post players who showed up in their team warmups at Tim's news conference in New Rochelle.

Now Montalvo is Tim's recruiting coordinator at Iona, where the Gaels -- 25-12 last season, Tim's first -- are favored to win the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference title and the automatic NCAA berth that goes with it.

Why not Iona?

On the practice court, Tim still carries the long and wiry build of an athlete -- that Cluess body with that reddish-pink Cluess complexion -- as he runs Iona through drills best described as organized chaos, with multiple balls in the air and players streaking up the floor and launching as many shots as they can. Tim wants the Gaels to play fast and furious, and fast and furious they will play.

He has a potential NBA playmaker in Scott Machado, the MAAC's preseason player of the year in Mike Glover, and a high-end transfer from Arizona, Lamont "MoMo" Jones, who wanted to play closer to his Harlem home to spend time with his ailing grandmother.

"We can relate to each other," Jones said of his new coach. "His attitude is straight New York, and I love it. He can talk to me in a way where I understand it even if he's screaming and yelling and cursing. He's not trying to downplay you; he's only doing it for the best."

Iona has already blown out Maryland and lost to Purdue in the final seconds. The Gaels are 8-2 after Wednesday's 88-79 victory at Richmond, a Sweet 16 team last year and another opponent that was supposed to hit the visitors harder than a blind pick.

Only nothing ever comes easy for a Cluess, on the court or off. Cancer didn't just take Greg and Kevin. The Cluess patriarch, Henry, survived colon cancer before he died of prostate cancer in 2007, and Patricia, the matriarch, survived breast cancer before dying last year.

Mary Ann, who still lives in that Cape Cod on Broadway, also survived breast cancer and had a double mastectomy. Hank, the oldest, had a melanoma cut out of his back. The Cluesses don't know if the vile disease snaking through the family tree has been triggered by the environment, genetics or fate.

They only know that their faith has never wavered, and that all these years later they still feel the presence of Kevin and Greg. The Cluesses believe in the power of signs, and they find meaning in the fact Patricia remained alive past midnight last year and died on the same date -- Jan. 23 -- of her son Greg's death.

Greg's wife, Linda, visited his grave one afternoon a few years ago, asked for a sign of better days to come, and suddenly found his jersey number, 44, in the corner of her cell phone screen. Before Iona's recent overtime victory at Denver, Mary Ann and her daughter Colleen saw a basketball logo and the name Greg on a license plate and turned to their clock. It read 4:44.

Hank, a skycap at McCarran International Airport in Vegas, counts as his best friend a former cop he met 12 years ago, a cop who happens to share Greg's birthday. On the day of his big interview at Iona, while waiting for athletic director Pat Lyons to meet him at a coffee shop, Tim was struck by a storefront across the street numbered 4435. Greg and Kevin. "I think I'll get the job," Tim told himself.

Lyons gave Tim office key No. 44 after hiring him on Patricia Cluess' birthday, April 8, only weeks after she died.

Tim's older son, Kevin Gregory, is playing varsity ball as a high school freshman, with T.J. not far behind him. The boys have worn 44 and 35 in youth leagues when the numbers were available.

"My brothers are my life," Tim said in his office recently, his voice cracking and his eyes turning moist. "They are where my love of the game came from."

As a boy, he couldn't wait to jump into one of his father's second-hand cars for the ride to his brothers' games at Alumni Hall. Now Tim is a grown-up Division I coach with grown-up Division I dreams. He can try to do for Iona what other men have done for the Butlers and Virginia Commonwealths and Gonzagas.

"Why not?" he asked.

Why can't he win at Iona like he's won everywhere else? Why can't Tim Cluess wear his pins and charms and watches in honor of the dead, and take a great basketball family's last great shot?

WORRIED ABOUT COLLEGE BASKETBALL'S LACK OF SCORING?

If you haven't already heard, college basketball is done, kaput, tucked snugly into a hell-bound handbasket. Scoring in major-conference games has dropped about 3 percent from last season, and offensive efficiency has dipped along with it. Across all of Division I, 2015 will likely register as the slowest-paced season in the shot-clock era. Games are too plodding, referees too willing to side with the defense, offenses too inept. It's a critique some NBA acolytes have lobbed at NCAA partisans for a while now, but the same complaints are gaining purchase among people who care deeply about the sport, people whose livelihoods depend on its popularity. Seth Davis of Sports Illustrated anointed one Saturday last month as "National Don't Make Baskets Day." ESPN's Fran Fraschilla recently worried about the absence of "coaching creativity on offense." "The game is of bad quality," ESPN's Jay Bilas told the Kansas City Star late last month. "The coaches aren't bad. The players aren't bad. We've got a bad product." A knowledgeable hoops fan (and amateur gambler) who emailed me the other day wrote, "It used to be fun betting overs in college basketball. Those days are over."

Iona head coach Tim Cluess has lots of theories explaining the state of things, some of which are more convincing than others: Coaches are controlling and risk-averse. Players aren't developing sound fundamentals at an early age. NCAA rules handcuff staffs in terms of practice time, especially during the summers when the calendar is clear. Neighborhood parks have emptied out, places where a kid might otherwise wait an hour to get more run if he doesn't take care of the rock. "How can we get more scoring, what rules can we tweak?" Cluess asks rhetorically. "Well, how about getting our players better?"

Down south, Davidson head coach Bob McKillop doesn't have the slightest clue what's going on. "I'm puzzled by the scores," he said. "I see better athletes, I see more skilled, developed players as they go through their high school years and into their college days. I can't figure it out." His only guess, and it's a reasonable one, is that longer and faster athletes also make for better defenders.

One thing we do know for sure? If you want to see a college basketball team score the ball, you need to be watching Iona and Davidson.

The Davidson athletic department named the court at Belk Arena after McKillop last February, slapping his signature on the hardwood next to some brown volleyball lines.¹ It's McKillop's 43rd year of coaching and his 26th as the head man at Davidson, the only college that's ever cut him a check. The Queens native is essentially self-taught. "When I became a high school teacher and was given a coaching position, I started reading about the guys who were great success stories — John Wooden, Red Auerbach, Red Holzman, Pete Carril," he says. "I went to as many clinics as possible, watched games as often as I could. You could go on and on, the list of people I copied or looked at and studied."

Closing in on 500 NCAA wins, McKillop describes the system he ultimately devised as an "equal-opportunity offense." For it to work, five players must be unselfish and versatile. "In the game today, people dribble excessively," says Elon head coach Matt Matheny, a former Davidson player and assistant. "If you really watch [McKillop's] teams play, they don't use the dribble without a purpose. Catching the ball, facing up, it's kind of the old-school way of teaching the game. Catch and face and see."

What you'll see, if you tune into enough Wildcat basketball, is balletic movement and boatloads of uncontested shots. Davidson (14-6, 5-5) has finished in the top 40 nationally in offensive efficiency each of the last three seasons. Through February 3, they're seventh this year, pouring in more than 80 points per contest. McKillop's group isn't particularly tall or deep, and they're quite young, but they share the ball willingly and rain 3s, knocking down 39.7 percent as a team. Senior Tyler Kalinoski is multidimensional and deadly from outside, junior Brian Sullivan a probing guard with a Euro-soccer haircut. They gave Virginia's pack-line defense all it could handle in late December and ripped a stingy Dayton unit to shreds for 77 without sophomore Jack Gibbs, their most skilled player. Picked to finish 12th in its first season of Atlantic 10 play, and last by editors at the Blue Ribbon Yearbook, Davidson wasn't slowed down by this summer's jump from the Southern Conference.

Playing at a liberal arts college with an enrollment of 1,850 is not for everybody, McKillop willingly admits. Of course, there are far worse places to spend the winter than in North Carolina, getting your buckets and eating barbecue at the coach's house, white picket fence and all, directly across the street from your practice facility. It worked just fine for Stephen Curry. "There's a magnetism about [McKillop], an intense, powerful presence," Matheny says. "He established a sense of urgency. ... He wanted that program to be great."

Like McKillop, Cluess was born in Queens, though he spent his formative years playing CYO ball on Long Island with three older brothers, all of whom earned scholarships to St. John's. So did young Timmy, who suited up for three seasons with the Red Storm before finishing his career at nearby Hofstra, the university that McKillop transferred into a decade prior. Cluess's first coaching job, again like McKillop, was in the Long Island prep ranks after stumbling into it at the whim of a friend; over 14 seasons, the former cop transformed Manhasset's St. Mary's High into a regional power.² When he finally stepped back onto a Division I floor in the fall of 2010, points were his priority.

For that, he blames Frank Morris, his high school coach at St. Agnes Cathedral. (Florida's Billy Donovan is also an alum.) Morris was a lacrosse man who brought those principles to the gym: rush the ball up the floor and put shots on goal. Morris's short memory and his numbered sideline break — a scheme designed to create scoring opportunities quickly off your opponent's made baskets — offered latitude that Cluess never took for granted. "Obviously, you tweak a million other things," he says, "but I always wanted to see what would happen at the college level if given the opportunity to play that system."

Iona largely has, and it's going gangbusters. The Gaels (16-6, 9-2) have won 20 games four years running, and they're on pace to claim their third Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference crown in five years. They've done so in extreme fashion; while Iona has finished in the top 30 in offensive efficiency each season since Cluess's arrival, its average defensive efficiency has been a woeful 222nd. Only Louisiana Lafayette has run more transition plays this season, according to Synergy Sports. As Ed Ingles, Iona's veteran radio analyst, puts it, "I think it's the most exciting basketball in New York."

There was a sequence in Iona's win on Saturday, against St. Peter's, that epitomized Cluess's atypical approach. Normally one of the country's most accurate shooting sides, the Gaels were ice-cold and trailing by 11 just before the half. Fans in the Hynes Athletic Center, Iona's sweatbox of an arena, were clearly restless. Everything flipped in an instant. A dribble-drive led to an easy layup, and then a step-back 3 from inside-out threat David Laury cut the gap to six. On the next possession, Laury hauled down a defensive rebound and slipped the ball to freshman guard Schadrac Casimir, who pushed hard down the left sideline and found A.J. English waiting at the 3-point stripe. To that point, English had missed his first six shots from distance and a pair of free throws to boot. When Iona's floor leader received the pass, he squared up without blinking and hoisted his seventh. That one landed. "A lot of coaches," English had told me the day before, "don't give you the freedom to make mistakes."

Luckily for Cluess, English doesn't make too many. Logging 20.7 points, 5.7 rebounds, and 5.6 points a night, he's the undisputed general of a squad that's fifth nationally in scoring, at 82.3 points per game. Casimir is the runaway MAAC freshman of the year, Laury an aggressive rebounder. And Cluess's wide-open approach has become the program's chief selling point. "Playing up-tempo is a recruiting tool," Ingles says. "Kids don't want to play slow today."

It's been seven years since Curry lifted Davidson onto his back and into the Elite Eight. Before the Wildcats or Gaels can make a similarly charmed run, both need to qualify for the tournament. McKillop's men must tunnel through a logjam in the competitive A-10 while Gibbs, who suffered a slight meniscus tear in January, nurses himself back to health.³ On a conference call this week, McKillop said the sophomore is "showing significant progress" but opted not to provide a firm timeline. The Wildcats are one of the "First Four Out" in Joe Lunardi's latest ESPN projections.

Up north, sharpshooter Isaiah Williams is suffering through a stress fracture in his foot, one the Gaels hope will heal in time for a mid-February return. The MAAC is a one-bid league, which means a single slipup in the conference tournament will cost Iona dearly. Even for a conditioned team, sprinting for three games in three nights without a deep bench is less than ideal.

Neither club will alter its style markedly in the homestretch, though, nor should fans of agreeable basketball want them to. "If we win, thank goodness," Cluess says. "If we don't, well, somebody else can take my job and do a better job than I can."

2/28/15 - Mid-Major Madness - Benjamin Miraski IONA GAELS HONOR MIKE HAYNES ON SENIOR NIGHT

If you don't know the story of Mike Haynes, it is a sad one.

Haynes was a promising basketball player out of Chicago, one that I remember posting highlights for when I worked at the Chicago Tribune. He was going to be a great small college player. He was going to make a name for himself.

Not long after Mid-Major Madness came back to life, we were hit with tragic news. Mike Haynes had been shot in his Chicago neighborhood, just days before he was supposed to report to Iona to begin his college career.

It was a tough blow, made even worse because the details were just so headscratching. Someone lost their life over a necklace. Someone lost their life at the hands of someone they knew because they were trying to make the neighborhood a better place.

Someone lost their life, period.

This happened during a horrendous summer filled with violence in Chicago. It hasn't gotten better, not by a long shot, and it will likely continue to be an issue of contention in the city. The mayoral race, which has to go to a run-off election because Mayor Rahm Emanuel couldn't grab 50 percent of the votes during the election this week, will center around two issues: education, and the continuing violence in the city.

Haynes would have been a senior this season. He would have been walking out to center court with his teammates Friday night as Iona hosted Manhattan. He would have been handed his jersey with his family flanking him.

But he didn't get that chance.

Iona did the only thing they could do to honor Haynes. They treated him as one of their own.

This is class.

3/15/16 – NY Post – Zach Braziller IONA'S X-FACTOR IS A GRANDMA'S BOY WHO LEARNED FROM SPOTTY PAST

Antoine Tutt saw potential stardom for Jordan Washington. He saw a young kid with the size and athletic gifts that could lead to a future in basketball.

But there was a roadblock standing in the way.

"I always called him 'The Waterboy,'" joked Tutt, a family friend and one of Washington's youth coaches, referring to the Adam Sandler movie. "His grandmother didn't want to let him play ball. I had to convince her to let him play. She wasn't interested in basketball."

Eventually, Joan Washington gave the OK when told it could garner him a college scholarship down the road, and Washington developed into one of the city's best big men, winning a pair of Public Schools Athletic League Class B titles at Pathways Prep in the lowest of the PSAL's three-tier system. The South Jamaica, Queens native often toyed with the idea of transferring to a city powerhouse, but never did. He got noticed on the AAU circuit with New Heights.

Washington didn't qualify out of high school, and went the junior college route, thriving at JUCO power Indian Hills in Iowa. He committed to Arizona State, but after a shoplifting incident at a Walmart, the Sun Devils parted ways with him. Washington, instead, committed to Iona, and will play in the NCAA Tournament on Thursday, when the 13th-seeded Gaels (22-10) meet No. 4 Iowa State in a Midwest Region opening-round game in Denver.

"It worked out for the best, [but] at the same time it's something I never should've done," the 6-foot-8, 255-pound forward said.

Iona associate head coach Jarred Grasso immediately went after him. He had known Washington for years, and thought he would fit in well with the Gaels. The incident, he thought, was an anomaly.

"The best part about him is he cares about people, cares about his teammates," Grasso said. "He comes up to the office, asks how you're family is doing. When he's on the bench in foul trouble, he's the biggest cheerleader we have.

"He's really a sweetheart of a kid."

Washington liked the idea of coming home to play for Iona, mostly because he could be closer to his grandmother, who didn't get to watch him play at Indian Hills. She was the one who raised him, and kept him focused during difficult times. Joan Washington won't be in Denver. She will be having hip surgery soon and can't make the trip — but she was able to attend the MAAC Tournament in Albany.

"That's the person who pushed me. She always said keep your head up," Washington said, and later added: "She was so happy she could see me play for a change."

Washington is an emotional kid. He will make muscles after big baskets, and he did lose his cool this season against Monmouth, slapping Chris Brady during the postgame handshake line, getting a two-game suspension. He has been instrumental in Iona's run to its first NCAA Tournament in three years, providing the back-to-the-basket presence it previously lacked. He averaged 13.8 points and 6.2 rebounds, and in the biggest game of the year, the conference title game versus Monmouth, had 15 points and 13 rebounds.

"He's given us a different dimension," Grasso said.

'MUCH' IMPROVED FORMER GATES CHILI STAR FINDS RIGHT FIT AT IONA

The college basketball landscape is littered with guys who gave up at the first sign of adversity. Kids who get homesick and pack their bags. Former high school stars who get to the next level, can't handle not playing a lot of minutes, and let their dream slip away.

Deyshonee Much could have been on that road to nowhere. But after nearly leaving prep school early and then deciding after one season to transfer from the University of Buffalo, the former Gates Chili star found the right fit and is taking advantage of it. Much, a sophomore swingman, is in his first season at Iona and has become a key player for the Gaels (22-10).

Instead of wondering "what if" he'll be playing in the NCAA Tournament. Iona, winner of the Metro Atlantic Athletic Association Tournament after finishing behind Monmouth in the regular season, is seeded 13th in the Midwest Region. The high-scoring Gaels (22-10) play No. 4 Iowa State (21-11) in their opener at 2 p.m. Thursday in Denver.

"He loves basketball. He has a love for the game," said Much's big brother, Kwamaine, 26, who has been a mentor to Deyshonee (pronounced DAY-shawn). "All those struggles and experiences through prep school and college, he fought them off and he earned this. I'm proud to see it's paying off."

And Deyshonee is proud to represent Rochester.

"Let everybody at home know that I appreciate the support," he said over the weekend, when the Gaels had no worries about getting into the Big Dance because they'd locked up the MAAC's automatic bid by winning its conference tournament.

"That's all I've been thinking about," Much added about the torture endured by bubble teams, like Monmouth (which got left out) and St. Bonaventure. "I'm glad we didn't have to worry."

The Gaels knocked off Monmouth, 79-76, in the MAAC title game and a lot of Much's family was there at the Times-Union Center in Albany to see it. He has started all but three games, ranks third on the team in scoring (13.1) and steals (1.1) and also averages 3.6 rebounds.

The eye-popping statistic is his shooting. The 6-foot-5, 170-pound Much, who has a slender build, ranks 10th in the country in 3-point shooting accuracy. He's making 45 percent of his shots (77-for-171) from deep. Heck, that's almost as good as his overall percentage (48).

"I've put in a lot of time in the gym. I wouldn't say I was always a good shooter," Much said with a chuckle.

Growing three inches since high school has helped his game, but even as a 6-2 guard for Gates Chili he put up solid numbers, averaging 21 points, 6 assists, 5 rebounds and 3 steals as a senior. Recruiters weren't calling, though, so he went to Redemption Christian Academy, a prep school in Northfield, Massachusetts.

Much put up good numbers, there, too (19.3 points per game), but he nearly left.

"I kind of gave up temporarily on my dream to play Division I basketball," he said. "It was just too much. I was putting the work in and playing and producing and putting up numbers and nobody was calling or I didn't know anyone was."

The Redemption coach never shared which colleges were recruiting his players because he didn't like the distraction and wanted them to stay hungry, Much said. When he called his family in Rochester, saying he wanted to come home, the phone ended up in the hands of his brother.

"I just told him to keep fighting. He had to see the bigger picture and I just got him to see that, to see the opportunity," recalled Kwamaine, who played ball at Wilson Magnet and Edinboro University in Pennsylvania.

The can-do attitude comes from their parents, Tradineya and Guy Ramsahai, said Kwamaine.

"We're Christian. We believe in faith and not giving up when it gets hard," said Kwamaine, who works for Hillside Work Scholarship Connection, mentoring kids and helping them find jobs.

He helped his brother find Iona by going onto a website called Verbal Commits that tracks the rosters of Division I and II teams, Kwamaine said. He looked for programs with thinner rosters or ones that'd be graduating a lot of players.

Before that, though, came Deyshonee's one year at UB, a trying season to be sure. He averaged only 6.6 minutes, playing in 22 games overall for then first-year Bulls coach Bobby Hurley, the former Duke star who after leading UB to last year's NCAA Tournament is now at Arizona State.

"You can put it in word for word," Much said when asked why he left UB. "Freshman year I didn't have the mental toughness to get through what coach Hurley had in store for me. I wasn't getting the minutes everyone else was and I didn't accept the challenge at the time."

But Much doesn't blame Hurley. "I'm putting it on myself," he said.

He said transferring felt like, "running away from the situation," and even though his brother again advised against leaving, he did, and Kwamaine helped him find his future. Much had to sit out last season under NCAA transfer rules.

"When he was leaving UB I was trying to get him to come to Canisius," said Golden Griffins forward Phil Valenti, the Victor native who knew Much from high school ball. "He's got a smooth game. He can obviously shoot it better now than in high school but he could always slash."

Much has become a gym rat.

"If you put the work in, (recruiters will) find you," he said. "That's the mindset I've had the majority of my career and it hasn't failed me yet. In the gym. Whether it's a (coach) or 10-year-old who wants to rebound for me, I'll say, 'Come on little buddy.'"

Iona, located in New Rochelle, Westchester County, can put up points. Its 79.6 average ranks among the top 15 in the NCAA field of 68. The Gaels rely on senior guard A.J. English (22.4 ppg) to set up a lot. The son of a former Division II National Player of the Year who played with the Washington Bullets, English pumped in 46 points in one game this year. But junior forward Jordan Washington (13.8 ppg) and senior guard Isaiah Williams (12.9) also average in double figures.

Reliable at the free-throw line, Much (80.6 percent) is also important in late-game situations. He crushed Canisius in two of Iona's three wins over Valenti's team. With English struggling on Feb. 5, Much erupted for a career-high 30 points on 8-for-12 shooting from beyond the arc. He had family and friends in the crowd that night in Buffalo.

He nicked Canisius for 22 points on 4-for-6 shooting from '3' in a Feb 28 win, 86-78, at home. "I just sensed that we needed something. The crowd started getting into it, it was just the college environment and it just took off from there," Much said.

How far can the Gaels go in the NAAs? "To me, it's shock the world, go as far as you can," he said.

Chris Amesbury, Much's high school coach, has seen him a handful of times back in Gates over the last two years and he has seen change in the young man.

"He has developed this will, this desire to be the best that he can be," Amesbury said. "He's a lot better basketball player now. We're all excited for him."

JARED GRASSO AN EXPERT AT JUGGLING HIS RESPONSIBILITIES AT IONA

The strongest attribute a Division I college basketball coach can have is their ability to multitask.

But Iona men's associate head coach Jared Grasso has taken that art to a new stratosphere in recent days. Grasso, his wife Andrea and their newborn son, Jared II, recently moved into a new home.

"(Andrea) thinks I'm nuts carrying boxes while I'm on speakerphone with recruits and AAU coaches," Grasso said.

When he's not busying changing diapers or moving boxes, Grasso has blossomed into one of the nation's best assistant coaches at Iona.

After Tim Cluess was hired as head coach in the summer of 2010, Grasso came with him to New Rochelle. The duo have helped forge an impressive run with Iona—the Gaels have made three NCAA tournaments, two NITs, and won three MAAC regular season crowns and played in five of the last six MAAC tournament title games, winning two.

"Jared has been extremely instrumental," Cluess said. "He is a big part of what we do on the court, recruiting, academically, and in all areas of our program."

Grasso was coming off a stint as Fordham's interim head when he got Cluess's call. The greatest influence for the native of Syosset, NY was his father Fred—a high school coach, but Jared also looked up to coaches like Cluess, Villanova's Jay Wright and Davidson's Bob McKillop. Thus, working for Cluess was an opportunity Grasso couldn't pass up.

"Coach got the job on a Tuesday night at 10 p.m. and he called me right away," Grasso recalls. "I took the job at midnight and started working at 7 a.m. the next morning."

Cluess knew of Grasso from years ago, as he coached against him in high school when Cluess was head coach at St. Mary's (Manhasset) and Grasso played at St. Anthony's in South Huntington, N.Y.

"I knew his work-ethic from having seen him and I knew what he was about from having coached against him when he was a player in high school," Cluess said. "I knew that he came from a basketball family that was passionate about the game and I knew he was someone with an edge that wanted to prove to people how good he was and how good a program he was a part of could be."

Grasso has carved a reputation through the years of finding players that fit Iona, even though they might not necessarily have certain measurable attributes. That success has kept the Gaels atop the MAAC standings.

"We've found a niche of finding a certain type of player that has had success here," Grasso said. "They can shoot, handle the ball, and, given how fast we play, we give them freedom to play offensively—moving the ball from side-to-side, but they must hustle back and play hard defensively."

"We've found players who are tremendous leaders, coachable and we're blessed to be guided by Cluess, one of the best coaches in the country. The way the Spurs and Warriors play in the NBA is what Cluess has been doing for nearly 25 years," Grasso continued.

There has been litany of examples of recruiting success with Grasso, including A.J. English, Sean Armand, David Laury, Scott Machado, and host of others. Armand followed Grasso to Iona and became one of the program's best players. A recent case study is English, who had no Division I offers prior to Grasso scouting him for Iona.

"Recruiting is a funny thing and there's no exact science to it," Grasso said. "Success can lead to opportunity, especially out of the area and more nationally. Armand and English were great examples—you have to trust your eye of what you see on the court and not what's on paper. We were able to get them in here. They fit our culture and for them to go on to the success they've had is a testament to not only them but coach's vision for the program."

The eye test is a recruiter's best friend, but the challenge is being able blend many different types of players and their talents into a cohesive unit. Iona's results speak for themselves. The Gaels have been one of the best scoring teams in the country, finishing in the top five in scoring four out of the past six seasons, including a school record 83.6 ppg during the 2013-14 season.

"We recruit basketball players," Grasso said. "We're not into 1, 2, 3, 4 or the 5 position but we put the best basketball players on the court and can do multiple things offensively and defensively. We've played four guys who were 6-2 and smaller and played three guys 6-8 and taller. They all have high IQs and our system can adjust to what we recruit."

That's been evident in recent big men David Laury and Mike Glover, who were comfortable playing at the top of the key with the ball in hand as they were with their backs to the basket in the low post.

"Jared has been excellent at understanding the system we run at Iona and finding the types of players fit that system," Cluess said. "Going out and finding guys that fit the way we play and guys that are under the radar that fit the way we play."

Offentimes with recruiting, success breeds a higher caste to recruit from, but Grasso contends an old trite formula is the key.

"Players go by word of mouth," Grasso said. "They see our success with the style of play we've had, averaging over 80 points a game and leading the country in three-point field goal percentage. Most if not all players want to run and play uptempo and when the players come here and have success, word of mouth is the best tool we have—more so than the coaches—because they can share first hand of how we do things here, culturally on and off the court. Our best recruiter is our players. We've had former players making good money playing professionally."

Some of the aforementioned players, such as Laury and Glover, were transfers and that has also been key in Iona's success, especially given how strong the MAAC has been in recent years.

"There's many good coaches and good players in the MAAC," Grasso said. "Every year it's a battle. The league's gotten better and we put two teams in the NCAA few years ago and should've had two this past season. We've added Monmouth with their tremendous program lineage and facilities. Every year going into the conference tournament, there's six to eight teams that can win the tournament."

While Grasso prepares for a seventh season in New Rochelle, the former Quinnipiac standout—whose dream of a post basketball career was derailed by a back injury—knows a potential head coaching gig awaits in the future. He got a taste of it as an interim coach at Fordham, replacing Dereck Whittenburg five games into the 2009-10 season.

"You move over one seat and you learn it's different when you move over 19 inches," Grasso said. "It could be difficult to be thrust into a situation few games into the season but it was a crash course on being a head coach and it was a great experience that will serve me well if I get that chance in the future."

But the focus now for this coach's son, who first touched a basketball at the age of two, is maintaining the continuation of success in New Rochelle.

"Iona has a great basketball tradition," Grasso said. "Jimmy Valvano to Jeff Ruland to Kevin Hamilton and now to Coach Cluess, who's one of the best winners in the game. I'm a New York guy and to be part of this program is a blessing and to be able to stay in the area, it's a home run for my family and I."

TRANSFERS SAM CASSELL, JON SEVERE HOPE TO CARRY ON IONA'S NCAA TOURNAMENT TRADITION

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. — Between them, Sam Cassell Jr. and Jon Severe have attended four high schools and four colleges. The two guards are a combined 46 years old.

Yet they are exactly the type of seasoned college basketball veterans that Iona coach Tim Cluess and his staff have recruited — and been successful with — in recent years as the Gaels have reached the NCAA Tournament in 2012, '13 and '16.

With former Iona star A.J. English now playing professionally in Italy and three other starters gone from last year's NCAA Tournament team, the Gaels are now looking to Cassell Jr. and Severe for ball-handling, scoring and leadership.

"Sam Cassell and Jon Severe are both playing well," Cluess told me recently of the two graduate transfers. "It helps us with some leadership on the team with so many new guys because you're not trying to break in a bunch of freshman who have no idea what it's about. These guys have played against big-time teams in big-time games so they've been able to lead in practice, tell guys when they aren't working."

The 6-foot-4 Cassell, 24, spent the last two years at UConn after playing one season at Chipola (FL) College. Before that, he attended three high schools before finishing up at Notre Dame Prep (MA). He actually committed to Maryland back in 2012 but was declared ineligible by the NCAA and headed to Chipola for a season.

"I just wanted to get somewhere where I could play," Cassell Jr., a Baltimore native and the son of the former NBA star, said of Iona. "I've watched Iona over the years and all the guys that came here and I felt as though the style they play matched my game."

Fueled by Cluess' up-tempo attack that encourages players to shoot a good shot within the first 10 seconds of the shot clock, Iona averaged 79.6 points per game last season, good for 29th in Division 1 according to ESPN. The year before, Iona's 79.6 points per game were tied for seventh nationally.

"The style of play, I didn't think it was this fast, but I'm getting adapted to it now," said Cassell Jr., who averaged just 2.2 points last season at UConn in limited time.

While Cassell Jr. can play the 1, 2 or 3, the 6-2 Severe can play the 2 and 3.

"Sam can shoot at a really good rate, he has a nice pullup," said sophomore guard Schadrac Casimir a Stamford, Conn., native who is healthy now after having two hip surgeries. "He can definitely help us instantly on the offensive end. And he's a good leader, he comes from a big school in UConn. He knows what he's doing."

"And Jon just has that New York mentality. He's going to go after you. He doesn't care who you are, he's going to go after you 94 [feet]."

The 6-2 Brooklyn native averaged 7.6 points last season at Fordham and 6.7 the year before after tallying 17.3 per game as a freshman. After graduating early from Fordham, the former Christ the King star said he was attracted to Iona's style, too.

"It's my last year and Iona's my style of play," said Severe, 22. "I just wanted to go out with a bang, get some wins under my belt, start off a new year."

He also likes the up-tempo style.

"It's more fun, going up and down and having fun," he said. "Run up and down getting up shots."

Monmouth is the favorite to win the MAAC, while Iona was picked to finish third. But both transfers believe the Gaels have enough talent to get back to the Big Dance.

"Yeah, we have a lot of pieces one to five," Severe said. "The whole roster is good."

Said Cassell Jr.: "Oh yeah, they lost a bunch of guys but they gained a lot of guys so I think we can get back to the tournament, yes."

AFTER LOST SEASON AND THREE SURGIES IN FIVE MONTHS, IONA'S SCHADRAC CASIMIR READY TO RETURN

NEW ROCHELLE, N.J. — When Iona beat Monmouth last March in the MAAC championship game to gain an automatic berth to the NCAA Tournament, Schadrac Casimir watched from his room at the Hospital for Special Surgery in Manhattan.

"I was rooting for my team," Casimir said recently in the Iona gym. "I was watching the game, I love the game, I'm a fan of the game, so I had no problem watching. I was upset I couldn't play."

The 5-foot-10 Casimir couldn't play for most of last season as he underwent three surgeries on his hips and groin in a five-month span.

Now, with Iona set to open the 2016-17 season Tuesday at Florida State, Casimir will make his return to the court, hoping to lead the Gaels to another NCAA Tournament berth next March.

"Schad is back and ready to go for the opener," Iona associate head coach Jared Grasso said. "He has made great strides the past couple of weeks."

The former Trinity (CT) Catholic star burst onto the scene in the MAAC as a freshman, dropping 40 points on Delaware State in just his fifth college game. Casimir ranked seventh in the league and led all MAAC freshmen in scoring during the regular season, averaging 15.2 points. He shot a league-best 43.8 percent from 3-point range and 90.1 percent from the free-throw line.

The future looked bright.

But then a year ago, just before the season began, he began to feel pain in his groin that was eventually diagnosed as a sports hernia.

"Around this time last year, I started feeling it in my groin," Casimir said. "When we played our first scrimmage I really started to feel it. And during the second scrimmage I knew it was going to really be a problem."

He played four games to start the season, scoring 16 in a win over Delaware, but then had to shut it down for the season because of a sports hernia and pain in his hips.

"It was all related. I felt it in my groin first before I felt anything," he said. "It was a groin pain. They said it's common in athletes. It could be over-work on the muscles, it could be a lot of different things. They said I could've had it for years, and it just started to bother me, so it was nothing I could control."

In January, he underwent the first of two hip surgeries to repair torn labrum repaired in his left hip.

"We don't know when it all started. It affected him throughout the season," Iona coach Tim Cluess told the Journal News in January. "We were not sure if he was going to be able to play through it and then take care of it after the year or not. He went for a second opinion and the doctor told him the best way to take care of it was with surgery."

Despite undergoing three surgeries across five months, Casimir said he never envisioned that his career might be over.

"I never really though negatively about it," he said. "When I was in the hospital I was just really thinking about when I could get back on the court, how long was it going to take."

Casimir must ice his hips and stretch every day as he tries to the strength back in his muscles. Along with graduate transfers Sam Cassell Jr. and Jon Severe, he figures to play a big part in Iona's up-tempo attack in the post-A.J English Era.

For now, those he's just happy to be back on the court and has modest goals.

"Win games. just help my team any way I can help them and trying to get back to 100 percent," he said of his goals. "Playing the way I can, but the first thing I'm thinking about is just helping my team any way I can."

THREE SURGERIES LATER, IONA'S CASIMIR IS BACK

NEW ROCHELLE - The morning of Iona's MAAC Tournament triumph over Monmouth, Schadrac Casimir was flat on an operating table at the Hospital for Special Surgery in Manhattan. The next week, the former MAAC Rookie of the Year leaned on crutches outside the Hynes Athletics Center and wished teammates well as they packed onto a bus and then a jet bound for Denver.

Casimir missed all that and more during what was destined to be his sophomore encore. Three surgeries later, the 5-foot-10 deadeye shooter is eyeing a return when the Gaels open Tuesday night at Florida State.

If he's back — and everything indicates he will be — Casimir will be about two months ahead of schedule.

"I'm feeling better as time goes on," he said. "I'm just trying to take it day by day. I'm not moving the way I was moving before, but I'm definitely taking steps in a positive direction. Every week I've been back I've been making improvements. That's what I'm focused on so far."

Casimir returned to practice this preseason, but his workouts so far have been limited to 30 or 40-minute periods. Of course, even that is a significant step for a player who endured a hip surgery in January, another in March and a third procedure to repair a sports hernia in May.

Casimir's physical downfall began last summer when he suffered what he believed was a minor groin injury during a team workout. The pain began to intensify last fall when even straight-line running became worrisome.

"When I tried to cut, I felt like something was tearing," he said. "Over time I couldn't move at all. I couldn't even walk some times."

Casimir, who averaged 14.5 ppg and made 94 3-pointers as a freshman, played just four games before he was diagnosed with torn labrums in both hips and the hernia. Although he spent time around the team, he missed key moments, namely the MAAC Tournament title and his team's trip to the NCAA Tournament.

"It wasn't like when you're a redshirt and you can still workout with the team. When I sat out, I was on crutches," Casimir said. "There wasn't that kind of outlet for me to get things off my mind and that made it tough. I wanted to play one more time with the seniors."

Now — with seven new players on the roster — Casimir is suddenly one of the leaders. Although just a redshirt sophomore, he is also one of only five players with experience playing under Tim Cluess.

Cluess, who played the lightly-recruited guard heavy minutes as a freshman, said Casimir has only begun to look like himself in the last week. That progress has made the coach confident that he can contribute, although the extent of what Casimir can provide is uncertain.

"In fairness, he put on 25 pounds and he still has no hips," Cluess said. "But I think I saw a little bit of a smile come back to his face when he made a shot and I think he's getting himself back to trying to make some of those moves he used to make. As long as he stays healthy, I expect him to get all the way back. I don't know if it's going to be a month from now, three months from now, or next season. But he's definitely made some strides and it's definitely going to help us having him out there."

How much? Both Casimir and Cluess aren't sure, but Iona will need him. The Gaels expect to open the season with just 10 healthy scholarship players, including six newcomers and the recovering Casimir.

For now, the soft-spoken Casimir will do something unusual for a heat-check shooter: He'll keep modest expectations.

"I'm just focused on trying to win games with my team," Casimir said. "I know we're not going to be the same team at first that we are in March. We just have to keep getting better because it's a whole new group."

TAYLOR BESSICK HAS GROWIN INTO IONA'S TOUGH GUY

The moment he first checks into a game, Taylor Bessick strikes an imposing image. He's not just Iona's biggest player at 6-foot-9 and 250 pounds, he's broad-shouldered and looks like a man with bad intentions. Bessick's arms are lined on all sides with tattoos after he added six or seven new ones last offseason.

"That wasn't intentional," he said with a laugh. "That was something I was already into and I had so much more time on my hands."

Bessick's new sleeves aren't the only byproducts of an offseason spent waiting for his injured left calf to recover. Unable to run, the senior dedicated himself to the weight room like never before and the result has been 20 more pounds of muscle that have transformed the once-passive big man into an aggressive presence in the paint.

Although he's second on the team in rebounding (5.6 per game) and first in blocks (nine), Bessick's improved play hasn't always been clear in the box score. But even he understands how pivotal his toughness and consistency have been during the Gaels' 7-3 start.

"It's been a confidence booster knowing that you can make plays you weren't making last year," said Bessick, who bulked up to 260 pounds before slimming down early this season. "I'm finishing more plays. It makes you tougher and you want to keep competing and being more competitive down low."

Bessick responded to the coaches who urged him to get bigger and play tougher in the paint after last season. He played at 230 pounds — 10 more than when he joined the program in 2014 after two seasons at James Madison — and never became more than a 10-minute-per-game player.

Bessick finished last season playing through a torn left calf. Doctors initially believed the injury could heal with rest, which meant he had to avoid running during the offseason.

"I couldn't do anything else because of my leg. I had no other choice because I didn't want to sit around and get fat, so instead I went into the weight room," he said. "The first month or two were tough because you don't see the results right away. But as you start to see the progress, you want more and more."

As his teammates worked out on the court, Bessick tied himself to strength and conditioning coach Kelly Shaver and athletic trainer Sam DeRosa. Bessick would even take pictures of his meals and text them to Shaver, who then suggested modifications as he saw fit.

"He really started to try to eat to gain weight," Shaver said. "We knew he was going to use that time to gain weight, but he really bought into it — nutrition-wise, recovery-wise. For him, he just said, 'If I can't play basketball now because of my calf, I want to do whatever I can so that when I get back there's no drop-off.'"

Bessick's calf eventually required surgery. After he had the procedure on July 26, he spent another three months working toward full health. He started by training in the pool or on a stationary bike before he was finally cleared to run in late October.

All along, Bessick kept up his effort in the weight room. The impact amazed the coaching staff once Bessick finally returned to the court this preseason.

"He formed a relationship with our strength and conditioning coach and the kid really bought into the system," coach Tim Cluess said. "I think the injury put things into perspective. Even today, lifting three or four times a week, I think he is seeing the benefits."

After a week off, Iona will continue its season Wednesday and Thursday in Las Vegas against Cal-Santa Barbara and Towson. You can be sure Bessick will look like one of the toughest players on the court. Now, he'll probably play like it, too.

"The tattoos don't make a person tough or not; it's just an individuality thing," he said. "But doing things that nobody else wants to do like play defense and block shots and being a defensive presence, that's what makes a person tough."

A SEASON OF TRANSITION CREATES UNCERTAINTY FOR IONA MEN'S BASKETBALL

NEW ROCHELLE - Days before his team embarked on a two-week trip that will send the odometer spinning, Tim Cluess sat at a table in his office and tried to make sense of his roster.

At that point, the exercise was very much a guessing game, even for the person who would know the players better than anyone.

"I think this is probably the youngest and newest group I've had," said the Iona coach, whose team has lost several key players and added seven new faces since its run to the NCAA Tournament last season. "We don't have anyone with more than one year of playing experience with our team."

The Gaels begin this season feeling the weight of the usual expectations — both internal and external — but they also confront an unusual amount of uncertainty. Not only are they without star A.J. English and other impact seniors, they return just two players who played consistent minutes last season.

"It is an adjustment," said junior guard Deyshonne Much, one of two returning starters. "Guys are sharing the ball a lot more. It's a good thing. A.J. was a special talent. Last year with him having the ball the majority of the game, that was our game plan. It worked. But this year is something different. We'll develop as the time comes."

Although English's ball dominance may have restricted Iona's ball movement, it also provided the team with stability. He was a four-year player and three-time all-MAAC first-team player who left high atop the program's record book in several categories and led the Gaels to a MAAC championship.

Some of his scoring and leadership will fall at the feet of seniors Jon Severe and Sam Cassell Jr. Both are new but happen to also be two of the team's most experienced players. They arrived in New Rochelle as graduate transfers after playing three seasons at Fordham and UConn, respectively.

Severe, a former New York "Mr. Basketball" from Christ the King, spent the early summer completing his degree at Fordham and couldn't join the Gaels until later this summer. He said Iona offered him two things he coveted — opportunity and a chance to stay close to his Brooklyn home.

"I see a lot of opportunity here," Severe said. "We have a lot of new pieces, a lot of old pieces. We just have to figure out how to put them together."

Severe saw his role at Fordham diminish after averaging 32.9 minutes and 15.9 shot attempts as a freshman. Cassell Jr., the son of three-time NBA champion Sam Cassell, played in just 36 games during two seasons at UConn.

Their talent will probably merit more minutes at Iona, but Cluess said he's still trying to figure out what they do well and if they can thrive at Iona's breakneck pace.

"Believe or not, Jon is not as aggressive as I'd like him to be offensively," Cluess said of the high-scoring guard. "People who have coached would have a heart attack if they heard me say that, but we need him to be a little bit selfish. We need him to take a little bit of that A.J. role."

Cluess said he will probably begin the season with Severe coming off the bench and start Cassell on the wing with Much to maximize the team's scoring potential. There is also the matter of Schadrac Casimir, the former MAAC Rookie of the Year who returns after a redshirt season marred by injury.

Former Spring Valley star Rickey McGill — whose minutes increased late last season as a defense-first guard off the bench — will run the point based on his strong play this preseason.

"He's gotten better," Cluess said. "He has a ton of areas to work on like everybody else, but I think he can play at our pace with the ball in his hands. We don't have a lot of guys who can play at that pace."

Iona's fortunes may rest with the continued development of the enigmatic Jordan Washington, who averaged 14.2 points and 6.4 rebounds per game last season. The 6-foot-8 senior from Queens actually led the nation in points per minute, but he was limited to just over 18 per game because of persistent foul trouble.

Much, a transfer from Buffalo, was also plagued by inconsistency in his Iona debut, but he finished as the third-leading scorer at 13.0 ppg and led the team in 3-point shooting at 44.7 percent.

"For us to have a chance to be good at all, they both have to play well," Cluess said. "Jordan obviously had a really good year, but he just gets in too much foul trouble. His body is better. His game is better. He's really developed in those areas, but it's really going to be about his playing discipline."

The team's getting-to-know-you process should be accelerated this month. Beginning with Tuesday night's opener at Florida State, the Gaels will be on the road until Dec. 4. They also visit Nevada on Nov. 20 and then play three games in Anchorage at the Great Alaska Shootout Nov. 24-26.

"I think it'll make us come together," Much said. "There's a bond off the court that you can develop with your team that can help you on the court."

RICKEY MCGILL EMERGING AS IONA'S NEXT GREAT GUARD

Entering the home stretch of his sophomore season, Iona's Rickey McGill has emerged as the next great Gael guard.

The latest in a long line of talented backcourt assassins to pass through New Rochelle, including Sean Armand, Lamont Jones, Scott Machado, and most recently AJ English, McGill's work ethic has led to a meteoric rise in his sophomore campaign.

After averaging just 10.5 minutes per game in his freshman season, McGill has more than tripled his time on the court. He currently checks in at 32.6 mpg while averaging 10.0 points, 5.2 assists, 3.7 rebounds, and 1.9 steals per contest.

His average of 5.2 apg leads the Gaels and ranks second in the MAAC to Rider's standout freshman Stevie Jordan (5.3), who McGill will match up against Friday night. Monmouth's Justin Robinson, widely thought of as the best point guard in the league, checks in at 5.1 apg.

"This year I feel like I've increased my game to a whole different level," McGill said following a win over St. Peter's, the Gaels' fifth in a row. "Over the summer, I was just working out and getting better every day."

McGill's emergence has been a pleasant surprise to the Iona faithful, largely because even the coaching staff doubted his potential entering the season. As a rookie reserve on last season's NCAA Tournament team, McGill averaged just 2.8 ppg and 0.7 apg, and the point guard reins on this year's squad seemed ready to be handed to UConn graduate transfer Sam Cassell Jr.

"We honestly didn't know if he'd be playing much for us this year," head coach Tim Cluess admitted about McGill. "Then he just started separating himself with his work ethic. ... Just watching Rickey's growth through the first couple of games, to game ten, and up to now, it's night and day where he is now."

In the span of 23 games, McGill has gone from a question mark to Iona's most consistent player. After coming off the bench for all 30 of the Gaels' contests last season, McGill is the lone player to start every one of the team's games this season.

As far as adapting to a backcourt situation with an older point guard joining the squad, things could not be better. Cassell and fellow graduate transfer Jon Severe have been fully supportive of McGill as he develops into the Gaels' primary point guard.

"Me and Sam, I think we've got the best relationship on the team," McGill said of Cassell. "We always know where each other are going to be at."

Cassell has given the Gaels another dimension, as they are able to regularly run out lineups with dual facilitators when he is on the court with McGill. Thus far, Cassell averages 3.2 apg and is in a tie with Severe for second on the team in scoring at 11.3 ppg.

"I just think they're all coming together and they're all feeling more comfortable with each other," Cluess said of his backcourt, which also includes sharpshooters Deyshonee Much and Schadrac Casimir. "They're more comfortable criticizing each other in the right way and talking about what they need to do on the next play. ... They're starting to talk and get that rapport out there as teammates, and I think it's great for [Rickey's] growth."

While relationships have solidified off the court, McGill insists things remain all business in the arena.

"I feel like since day one, we've become closer and more like a brotherhood," McGill said of his teammates. "Every day we'll joke around with each other, but then when we come on the court everything is serious. We'll go at each other – no friends on the court."

Iona, known as an up-tempo, high-scoring team during Cluess' tenure, has certainly benefitted from McGill's tenacity on the defensive end of the court. Even before his offensive outburst this season, McGill had been praised as a high-energy defender.

"Defensively he's always brought a good effort to it, but now I think he's understanding defensive concepts better than he did a year ago," Cluess said of McGill. "He brings great energy to the game, and he's got a toughness about him that I think is contagious to our team. He's got a real edge, wants to win, and doesn't want to make excuses."

McGill's play has been a major reason the Gaels have taken off after a middling 3-4 start to MAAC play as they make their visit to Rider on a five game winning streak, sitting in second place in the league at 8-4.

In league play alone, McGill's averages jump to 13.2 ppg, 5.7 apg, and 4.0 rpg. He recently posted back-to-back career scoring highs with 20 points in a win over Quinnipiac followed by a 22-point output at Siena.

In the win over Quinnipiac, McGill flirted with a triple-double while adding eight rebounds and seven assists. He admits the goal of a triple-double is something he thinks about often, and with his skill set and two more years of development, it is likely he could accomplish the task one day in the future.

There have been just two triple-doubles in Iona history, the first by Nakiea Miller against Fairfield in the 2000 MAAC tournament semifinals, and the second by Scott Machado on February 12, 2012 against Marist.

As for a direct comparison between McGill and Machado, Cluess warns it's a bit early to measure the sophomore against one of the program's greats. However, there are signs that McGill could reach the same heights one day.

"Scott wasn't as athletic as Rickey, but saw the game really well," Cluess said. "Rickey has really got to kind of figure out where the defense's weakness is when he does certain things and how to attack. When to attack a gap, when to go to the rim, when to pass the ball, who's got the hot hand, so he's learning a lot. He's been starting at the point guard or second guard for less than a season. There's a lot to be said for the fact that we're having success with him doing that, and he's a prime reason why we are."

Thanks in large part to McGill's stellar sophomore season, the Gaels are once again in the hunt for another MAAC title, and McGill himself in the conversation for all-MAAC honors.

JON SEVERE MAKING IMPACT IN NEW ROCHELLE AS GRADUATE STUDENT

In the present era of college basketball, one thing that is becoming common is the trend of the graduate student. These are players that have already played graduated college with their undergraduate degrees that are going towards their master's degrees that have a single year of eligibility left.

These types of players are an added bonus for many programs because of the length of time that they have been in school. Their leadership is valued when it comes to educating younger players in the locker room, because they've been there and have seen a lot.

One player that has such maturity is Jon Severe. The Brooklyn, NY native has been an added plus for the Iona Gaels this season, helping out in the clutch in many games, and leading them to a 15-8 record this season.

"I mean, I love basketball. I grew up playing basketball, it's just fun to me, I love it," says Severe. After moving back from Florida as a seventh-grader, he took the game more seriously.

When asked about being from the borough of Brooklyn, "Well, Brooklyn is Brooklyn. Every guard from Brooklyn is tough."

Severe made his name at the famed Christ the King High School in the Middle Village section of Queens, which was a perennial national powerhouse and was also the alma mater of NBA players such as Khalid Reeves, Lamar Odom, Erick Barkley and current Hofstra University assistant coach, Speedy Claxton.

During his time at Christ the King, he would lead the Royals to three Brooklyn/Queens Diocesan titles, two CHSAA city titles and two New York State Federation titles senior. Also in his senior year, he would be named a Parade All-American and was given the honor of the New York Mr. Basketball, the highest honor in the state, and last, but not least, he was given Player of the Year Awards from publications such as the New York Daily News, the New York Post and MSG Varsity.

When asked about his time at Christ the King, Severe added: "I learned a lot from Christ the King, great coaches, great program. I love CK. Always."

In April 2013, he signed his letter of intent to play at Fordham University. On his decision to commit there, he said, "It was close to home, they showed me much love."

As a freshman in the 2013-14 season, he made his mark in the Atlantic-10 Conference as he averaged 17.3 points per game and would be named the Metropolitan Basketball Writers Association Rookie of the Year. He even scored 30 or more points three times that season (30 points against Manhattan, 32 points against Monmouth and 35 points against Duquesne).

"It was fun, I wish I had a better freshman year, because I got kind of tired, I wish I was in shape. I started off good and in the second half, I got tired. I wasn't in great shape, so I put that on myself," Severe says about his freshman season.

The next two years would see a decline in his statistics, as he averaged 7.6 points as a sophomore and 6.7 points as a junior for the Rams. But under the direction of new head coach Jeff Neubauer, Fordham went 17-14 and made it to their first postseason tournament since 1992, when they made it to the first round of the College Insiders.com Postseason Tournament.

"I mean, Coach Neubauer is a great coach, there's different styles. You have to play defense over there and he's doing a great job over there. Good luck with Fordham," said Severe about his time with the Rams.

But off the court, Severe took his education seriously as he would win a couple of academic awards from the Atlantic 10 as a freshman and sophomore and would graduate from Fordham in three years with his degree in Communications. "Yeah, I've always been good with my classes. That's my number one thing. I just wanted to make my family happy. And getting my degree did just that."

His advice to the youth: "Just keep working. You can't just want to play basketball because when the ball stops dribbling, you're going to need a backup, so you have to have your schoolwork done."

With one final season of eligibility left, Severe decided to transfer to Iona to get his master's degree. And that move has paid huge dividends for the Gaels, as he has averaged 11.6 points and 3.6 rebounds this season and is the third-leading scorer behind fellow graduate student Sam Cassell Jr. and senior forward Jordan Washington.

"I mean, it's just my solid play and I love it here. It's great here, the coaches teach me everyday and it's great here," says Severe on coming to Iona.

With the way things are going for the Gaels, who are now in second place in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference, there is no telling that they will be poised to make a deep run during the conference tournament in Albany, NY, during the week of March 2-7. Last year, Iona won the MAAC title and made a first-round appearance in the NCAA Tournament. This year, they plan to do the same thing again, this time with Severe helping them out with his three-point shooting and slashing drives to the basket.

But then again, no matter where he goes, the future will always be bright for Severe. "Wherever it goes, I can't tell the future, I hope it's great. I'm just gonna keep working right now."

LEARNING CURVE: BUSHWICK NATIVE'S DETERMINATION LEADS TO DOMINANT HOOPS CAREER

He considers himself a student.

Jon Severe is always learning, always determined to get better and overcome the next obstacle. It's a trait that served the Bushwick native well in the classroom — graduating from Fordham University in three years — and on the basketball court.

Severe, in the midst of his final season of eligibility, has settled into a leadership role at Iona College this year, but he's still learning. In fact, he's learned more about himself this year than ever before.

"I've just tried to get smarter on the court," Severe said. "Before I was kind of fresh to the game and I'm always trying to learn something new. I've learned to trust my body and started really doing the right things on and off the court."

Severe's basketball education began at Christ the King, leading the Royals to a Federation title as a senior. He was also named a Parade All-American and New York's Mr. Basketball, the state's highest honor, wrapping up his career in Queens with more than 1,100 points.

"Christ the King was always a great program, and they always find a way to win," Severe said. "There's just a ton of talent in that team. It really helped shape me as a player."

Severe learned even more at the college level — fine-tuning his game and his offensive presence to become one of the most dominant scorers in Fordham history. He set the Rams freshman scoring record with a whopping 536 points, and he racked up 10 games with double-digit points as a junior last season.

Severe credits his determination to learn more about the game for helping him on the court. He's worked on his shooting technique for as long as he can remember, but as far as Severe is concerned, there's always room for improvement.

"I think I've improved my shot-selection," he said. "It's easier to tell what's a good shot and what's a bad shot now. I'm still trying to be a bit more defensive-minded as a guard though."

Severe graduated from Fordham in three years with a degree in communications, but he still wanted a brand-new challenge and it found it — at Iona.

He's had to work to find a place in the Gaels starting lineup, but Severe believes he's hit his stride over the last few weeks. His 11.3 points per game are second on the team in scoring, and Severe saw action in all of the team's first 23 games.

He's still learning, but he's also having some fun.

"I thought the team was really good for my style of play. I've had fun playing here," Severe said. "It's a score-first program, and that's my kind of mentality."

Severe has been around the basketball block over the last decade or so, and now that he's at Iona, he's doing his best to impart a few of those lessons on to his teammates. The student, in this case, has become the teacher.

"I've been in just about every situation on a basketball court," Severe said. "So I try to help the freshman out and help out teammates who haven't seen certain things before. I kind of see that as my role."

Severe has one more thing he'd like to learn at Iona — how to win a championship. The Gaels are the favorites to repeat as Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference champions and Severe is determined for one final test on the national stage.

And he's ready to work for it.

"I've just been trying to come to practice every day and play hard," Severe said. "That's always been my mentality. I want to be consistent, come out and take over."

JORDAN WASHINGTON TOOK IN EVERY MOMENT OF HIS SECOND CHANCE

Iona College men's basketball senior Jordan Washington got another shot at playing Division I basketball last season when head coach Tim Cluess gave him a second chance after he was arrested for theft in 2014, which ended his opportunity to play at Arizona State.

"I wholeheartedly believe in giving guys second chances," Cluess said. "I think some of the people, who need second chances are often overlooked in life and not just on the basketball court."

Washington has taken advantage of his opportunity as he posted 16 points and seven rebounds per game during his two years wearing maroon and gold. Last year, Washington posted 14.2 points and 6.4 rebounds per contest, while helping the Gaels win the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC) Championship.

This season, Washington was a force in the paint once again, averaging 17.7 points and 7.5 rebounds to go along with his All-MAAC First Team honor. He also had three games where he scored 30 or more points.

Washington was getting pretty emotional during the senior day game against conference-leading Monmouth on Sunday. When Washington saw his family in the stands and his teammates by his side, it made him realize how far he has come.

"It was very emotional even though we lost," Washington, who finished with 16 points and eight boards, said after falling to the Hawks, 79-73. "Seeing my family and my teammates picking me up and say we are going to play hard in the tournament brought my emotions down, and I started crying after that."

Washington couldn't help reflecting on what Cluess and the rest of the staff did to get his college career going in the right direction.

"I'm happy Coach Cluess gave me another chance," Washington said. "I wouldn't be here if he didn't give me a second chance."

A guy like Washington is someone Cluess believes are the type of guys coaches should work with and make sure they have an opportunity to be mentored.

"If we as coaches can find someone, who we think is worth investing in, and think are trying to do the right thing, if we can help them through basketball that's what we are here for," Cluess said.

Washington and the rest of the team will be working hard in the gym throughout the week as they prepare to win their second consecutive conference title.

FRESHMAN E.J. CRAWFORD SHOWCASES IONA'S VERSATILITY

Just a freshman with less than 30 games under his belt, E.J. Crawford may already be Iona's most versatile player.

The 6-foot-6 native of Hartford, Connecticut is the latest in a long line of offensive threats coach Tim Cluess and his staff have lured to New Rochelle. With offers from league-leaders UNC-Wilmington and Vermont on the table, Crawford instead chose the Gaels, who in recent years have established themselves as a blue-ribbon program in the MAAC.

What makes Crawford stand out from past recruits like A.J. English, Schadrac Casimir and Rickey McGill is his size. At 210 pounds, the young wing fills a key cog in the Iona offense left barren by last year's graduation of versatile swingman Isaiah Williams.

Williams, who joined Iona for his sophomore season in 2013-14, averaged double-figures in each of his three seasons in New Rochelle and notched 1,044 points over that time. The Gaels appeared in the MAAC Championship game each those three years, capturing the title in 2016. In their 2015 semifinal win over Monmouth, Williams set a single-game tournament record with nine made 3-pointers.

"We needed someone who could take over Isaiah Williams' spot," Cluess said of Crawford's recruitment. "We were looking for someone with enough size that could help rebound at that spot and can also make some shots from there."

Despite his young age, Crawford is already physically a match for Williams, who checked in at 6-foot-7, 190 pounds during his senior campaign. Although expected to fill a similar role, the two also possess different skill sets.

"Isaiah, throughout his career, was more of a catch and shoot guy and an energy guy on defense," Cluess added. "I think E.J. can balance the ball, get to the hole, and do a few other things a little better. He's not as athletic as Isaiah was, or playing with that same defensive motor, but we hope that will develop as he gets used to the college game."

For Crawford, the biggest adjustment to the Division I level has simply been the speed at which the Gaels play. Ranked among the top 50 teams in the nation in tempo for each of Cluess' first six seasons, Iona's fast-paced system demands that players be in top condition.

"The biggest challenge has probably been the physicality and just being in shape," Crawford said. "When I came here at first, I wasn't in shape, so I couldn't keep up. The culture here is it's a fast program, and if you're not in shape you can't play here."

As Crawford has adjusted to the Division I level, his time on the court has steadily increased. The freshman averages 25.2 minutes per game, which eclipses even English's rookie rate of 21.8 mpg. Crawford has also found himself a regular in the starting lineup. He has started 24 of the Gaels' 27 games thus far, averaging just a hair under 10 points per contest and has dropped double-figures on 16 occasions with a career-high 20 coming against Quinnipiac on January 23.

Though Crawford has developed a knack for putting the ball through the hoop, his presence on the boards has yet to live up to Williams' standard. While Williams averaged 4.0, 6.1, and 6.9 rebounds per game in each of his three seasons, Crawford has notched just 3.2 rpg in his rookie year.

In terms of shooting, Crawford is already off to a great start. While Williams was a 50% shooter for each of his first two seasons, his average dipped to 43.3% in his senior campaign. Crawford is currently shooting 45.1% from the field, and his 44.7% mark from three-point range tops any of Williams' campaigns.

Crawford's first signature moment came late in the Gaels' 79-75 win over Ohio on December 10. With the score knotted at 75 entering the final ninety seconds, Crawford accounted for the game's final four points, including a critical three-point play to put the game out of reach in the waning seconds.

With the Gaels up by one, McGill came up with a steal inside the final thirty seconds. Before Ohio could make the necessary foul, the ball was passed on to graduate guard Sam Cassell Jr., who heaved it upcourt toward Crawford, standing alone beneath the Bobcats' basket. The freshman converted the layup, and along with the added point on the foul gave the Gaels enough breathing room to come away with the win.

"He's really clutch," Cluess said of Crawford. "He doesn't get fazed by the moment in the game. He's a very confident young man."

Entering the home stretch of regular season, Iona is still in play for the second seed in the MAAC tournament, which carries with it an extra day of rest between the quarterfinal and semifinal rounds. If the Gaels are to make another March run, the continued development of Crawford on the wing will be a big reason why.

"He's only a freshman, but he's understanding a lot more today than what he did two or three months ago, as far as what it takes to be good and what it takes to compete," Cluess said after a recent win over St. Peter's. "I like the steps he's starting to take, but he has a lot of big steps that he needs to take ahead of him."

3/6/17 – NY Journal News – Josh Thomson IONA'S CASIMIR, MUCH HOPE TO CAP COMEBACKS IN MAAC FINAL

ALBANY - By the time Schadrac Casimir finally arrived home from the hospital last year, Iona and Monmouth were about to tip-off for the MAAC championship. Casimir had endured right hip surgery that morning — the second of three procedures during a grueling offseason — and he spent the first half in a medicated fog.

What does he remember?

"Winning," he said. "I remember forgetting I was hurt and trying to jump up and cheer and almost tearing my hip again."

Count Casimir as one of several Gaels old and new with plenty driving them in Monday night's MAAC championship game against Siena. Another is junior Deyshonee Much, who was one of the stars last year, scoring 15 points in Iona's 79-76 triumph over Monmouth. Like Casimir, this season has been a complicated one for Much, but he hopes the struggle was worthwhile.

The 6-foot-5 swingman entered this season as the team's second-leading returning scorer, but injury and ineffectiveness led to a disastrous start. His standing on the team plummeted to the point that Tim Cluess benched him during a win over Marist on Dec. 31. Much responded by leaving the team prior to a game at Fairfield two days later.

Much returned three days later, but didn't seem to regain a rhythm until late in the regular season.

"I think he's finally back to himself right now the last four or five games," said Cluess, whose team plays Siena on its home floor, the Times Union Center, at 9 p.m. "He's playing with more confidence and taking a bigger role within our team offensively and defensively and talking to the other players more."

Much blamed himself for his malaise. His dissatisfaction stemmed from falling short of the expectations he set for himself prior to the season.

"It was just frustration," said Much, who has reached double figures in four straight and averaged 14.5 ppg during that stretch. "I just felt like I worked so hard and it wasn't showing in my game. In the game of basketball, you just have to be patient. I wasn't patient, kind of taking the easy way out. That not how things work in the real world. My coach addressed me about that a couple of times. He got my head on straight to get me back on the floor with my teammates."

Casimir has been on the floor almost all season, but his production has been far more inconsistent than two seasons ago when he was named MAAC Rookie of the Year. Casimir's three offseason surgeries and abbreviated recovery time have left him physically able to participate, just not always at 100 percent.

The redshirt sophomore has hit double figures eight times this season, but only twice with less than 48 hours of rest. He scored 22 points in Saturday's quarterfinal win over Rider, then had just four points in 27 minutes Sunday night against Saint Peter's.

Cluess had initially suggested that he might not play Casimir much in back-to-back games; Monday's MAAC final will mark his third game in as many nights.

"I thought he was more productive yesterday," Cluess said. "I thought he did some productive things out there where in the past in that second game it's been like, 'We have to get him off the court. He looks like he's in mud.' He didn't look like he was in mud. He had good energy."

Casimir participated in Monday afternoon's shootaround and felt nothing more than typical day-after soreness.

"I'm going to do what I can to help my team win," Casimir said. "It's a championship game so no excuses."

Casimir shouldn't be the only Iona player eager to taste victory Monday. Of the players on this year's roster, only Much, senior Jordan Washington and sophomore Rickey McGill played in the win over Monmouth last March. Casimir was at home, senior Taylor Bessick missed the game with a calf injury and the team's five other scholarship players are new.

"I'm hoping they're hungry because they want to taste a piece of it more on the court than they were able to because of the injuries," Cluess said. "I'm hoping they come out with fire in their bellies tonight because we're going to need that. We're going to have Siena with 8, 9, 10,000 on their home court. We're going to need it."

3/7/17 – Fan Rag Sports – Jon Rothstein ROTHSTEIN FILES: IONA HAS BECOME A MID-MAJOR DYNASTY UNDER TIM CLUESS

The decision of former Iona and current Seton Hall athletic director Pat Lyons to hire Cluess from Division II C.W. Post in 2010 will go down as one of the best hires in MAAC history.

Since taking the post in New Rochelle, the Long Island native has led the Gaels to four NCAA Tournament appearances in the last seven years and the three years during that span that Iona missed the NCAA Tournament it lost in the MAAC title game by a small margin.

Monday night's 87-86 overtime win over Siena in Albany was the latest installment of Cluess' March brilliance, but it would be wrong to limit his impact to just the biggest month of the year on the college basketball calendar.

The 57-year-old head coach is the only person in MAAC history to have seven consecutive 20-win seasons.

All he does is win.

TIM CLUESS TURNS IONA INTO POWER WITH MENTOR'S '12-7-4' POLICY

The beauty of Mr. Morris — that's what his players called him, always "Mister," never "Coach," even now — was he never pretended he had invented basketball, even as he unwittingly kept reinventing it. Frank Morris had been a lacrosse player at SUNY-Cortland. When he showed up at St. Agnes High in Rockville Centre in 1961, that's what he knew.

"And hard work," Tim Cluess says. "Always hard work."

Morris won 491 games in 27 years at St. Agnes, but what the kids who played for him — and others, who only wish they had played for him — remember best isn't just that they won, it was how they did it: with a frenetic pace that would have made a shot clock obsolete even if it was in use, box lacrosse with a bigger ball.

"The policy," Cluess says, "was three seconds, four tops, and get a shot. Not three, four seconds to get in the offense. To take a shot."

He laughs. These are good days for Cluess, and for his Iona Gaels. Monday night they edged Siena in overtime, 87-86, to wrap up their second straight MAAC title, the fourth in the last six years. In seven seasons in New Rochelle Cluess has never won fewer than 20 games, piled up a 162-77 record — and done it his way.

Which also means Mr. Morris' way.

"It's important to me to let people know that this kind of basketball, and commitment, it goes back a long way," Cluess said.

What's also important to note is this: quietly, and quite unexpectedly, Tim Cluess has become, right now, the best basketball coach presently working a sideline in New York — at any level. Which really is something, when you think about it, because he didn't coach his first game at the college level (at Suffolk CC) until he was 45, didn't work his first game at Division I until he was 50.

Turns out there may be different way to climb the coaching ladder. Turns out there might be a better way. Especially when you have a role model.

"Mr. Morris never had the opportunities I've had, even later on in my career," Cluess says. "I know Monday night I looked toward him in Heaven and said, 'Thanks for teaching me what you taught me. If you had the chance you'd be just as successful at this level.' "

Morris' St. Agnes program spawned plenty of coaches, most notable among them ex-St. John's boss Brian Mahoney and Billy Donovan, who twice won NCAA Tournaments at Florida and now coaches the NBA's Oklahoma City Thunder. Both speak easily of the influence Morris — who died in 2004 at age 70 — had on them.

But Cluess, in many ways, has become the primary vessel to Morris' old-school hoops values. Back in the day, you could always tell a St. Agnes kid on the favored Long Island basketball breeding grounds of Prospect Park (in East Meadow) and Hickey Field (in Rockville Centre) because they were the ones with the T-shirts or the shorts that had "12-7-4" stitched on them.

As in: 12 months a year; seven days a week; four hours a day. The rings that Iona's 2016 MAAC champions received last year? They were etched with the secret code: 12-7-4. So were this year's practice uniforms.

And so, too, was the soul of the team, a fearless group of grinders and gut-check players who made so many critical shots down the stretch and in overtime Monday, facing down an overwhelmingly pro-Siena crowd at Albany's Times Union Center. And if the Gaels didn't have to do the heavy lifting themselves this year as they did last in knocking off league heavyweight Monmouth (Siena beat the Hawks in the semis), they had little doubt that they could have, given the chance.

"We bring players here who want to have the opportunity to play in games like that one, and who are willing to pay the price to make that happen," Cluess says. "We know how hard it is to win a league like this."

And they have made a habit of it. Credit the players, for sure.

But Cluess stands alone in New York for building and maintaining a culture of sustainable success. He does this to honor his old coach, yes; and also to honor the legacy of one of New York's great basketball families — both his brothers, Greg and Kevin, had terrific careers at St. John's, and both died young from leukemia.

Mostly, he does this, he coaches, because he still feels the same way he did during his 15 years as a head coach at St. Mary's in Manhasset, because he remembers, every day, the way Mr. Morris approached the job back in the day.

"If you love basketball and you coach it the right way," he says, "you'll get a chance to change lives, every day."

Every day. Twelve. Seven. Four.

ROAD BACK FOR CASIMIR INCLUDES STOP AT NCAA TOURNAMENT

As Schadrac Casimir celebrated with his Iona teammates on the Times Union Center court Monday night, his mind was focused on the present but occasionally flashed to the past, in particular the previous 12 months.

Casimir, the former Trinity Catholic star, was the Metro Atlantic Association Conference's Rookie of the Year in 2015, averaging 14.5 points per game and making the fifth-most 3-point shots in Iona history. The 5-10 guard was living up to his potential after carrying the Crusaders to the state championship game as a senior and then taking a prep year at South Kent.

But the Gaels were upset in the MAAC Tournament, and Casimir only played four games last year before injuring himself last January. He needed hip surgery on each labrum and then another operation for a sports hernia. He was a spectator as Iona reached the NCAA Tournament.

"It was one of the most stressful times of my life," Casimir said by telephone yesterday, thinking back to watching the team he was supposed to help lead win without him. "Probably the most stressful time of my life."

Casimir said he gained over 30 pounds and was somewhat lost looking to fill a void. The basketball court had always been both a sanctuary and a place to shine, and now it had been taken away.

"You don't realize how much you do it, how much time it takes out of your day," Casimir said. "I had to find new things. Spent more time with family and friends. I had a lot of home time. I stayed after class a little bit more and participated in my school clubs. I was working. I never used to work. I was working with kids, training kids."

Casimir soon channeled the energy he used to excel in the sport toward returning to it. Which is why there was extra satisfaction Monday as Casimir got his turn to hoist the MAAC championship trophy after an 87-86 overtime win over Siena.

Casimir is going to the big dance, March Madness. This time he will be on the court.

"That was the greatest feeling ever," Casimir said about Monday's game. "Last year I was happy for my team but I couldn't really play. This year I felt more a part of it. I felt responsible for it. Coach trusted me to start. He had faith in me. That meant a lot. That was important. My freshman year was disappointing because I felt we should have won it. This helped make up for it."

Casimir played 92 minutes in the three playoff games, the most of any three-game stretch this season. He started the final five games after just a pair of starts back in early January. Casimir, who had showed flashes of his old offensive game, scored 22 points in a quarterfinal win over Rider and 10 against Siena.

Casimir is averaging 7 points a game this year.

Casimir accomplished this though he admitted he is probably just 60 percent of the way back.

"Right now there's just a lot of wear and tear on my body," Casimir said. "I'm going to take time off after the season. I came back a little early."

There is still a lot of work ahead. The body still can't always match Casimir's instincts. He has been more selective.

"It's super frustrating but you can't force it," Casimir said. "I've never been one of those players to force something I can't do. If I can't do something I'm not going to just do it to try and live up to something I previously could. Do things for my team to win."

"I didn't really change my game, I just don't attack as much," Casimir added. "Maybe some plays I pulled up instead of going all the way. Basically I played smarter."

Casimir said he has learned a lot this past year. He can practice full time with the Gaels but is unable to do the outside work that has always set him apart. It takes a year to recover. Casimir said he is counting the days until that time next January.

"I know once I'm able to work out again I'll be able to get back again because I believe in my work ethic," Casimir said. "I haven't been able to work out. That's the most frustrating thing. I'm on limited time. That's where I get my confidence from, my workouts, and I haven't been able to do my one on one workouts. I've been able to do more and more so I am gradually getting there."

Casimir said his time off may have offered a roadmap for his future.

"That's what made me realize I could see myself working with kids in the future or doing physical therapy," Casimir said. "It made me think about life after basketball."

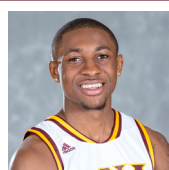

Right now Casimir's live again is basketball. Next Thursday or Friday he will be playing in the NCAA Tournament for a national audience.

"We just have to get back to work," Casimir said. "We are going to face some really good teams so we have to do the best we can."

And at some point next year, Casimir said he anticipates playing a more prominent role in Iona's drive for a MAAC three-peat.

"Right now I am trying to do it for our seniors," Casimir said. "I know my time is going to come again."
